Whether its pollution, course architecture, course maintenance, club building, or tracking statistics, we focus on creating activities that allow kids to see golf from several different STEM related points of view. The golf activities are created to tie to the STEM Activity. The day the kids talk about architecture and design, we will have them build their own putting course from scaled drawings to completed putting course. When we talk about course maintenance, we will have the kids hit different shots from different grass types (Rough, Fairway, and Green) to see how these effect the golf ball. During these classes, the kids will also play some classic games such as Tic-Tac-Toe, 21 Chipping, or Animal Full Swings.
